Conditional and System-Driven Flows

This section documents navigation paths that are triggered by system conditions rather than direct user intent. These include authentication checks, data unavailability, validation failures, and system enforcement routes such as retries, redirects, and forced actions. The following diagrams illustrate how the navigation architecture responds predictably under different conditional states.